UP-TO-DATE MONTE CARLO IS PLACED IN CASINO

Especially Designed for Those Who Commit Suicide After Losing at Monte Carlo.

BY LA MARQUESE DE FORTENOY.

VISITORS from this country to Monte Carlo—mean those who frequent the public gambling tables there from which the Prince of Monaco, now sojourning in the United States, has great wealth will be interested to learn that the management of the Casino has just equipped the latter with a most up-to-date mortuary, where bodies can be preserved indefinitely. The directors have taken the pains to make this public, as if with the view to impress players with the conviction that every provision is being made for their peace of mind and life, and for their comfort after death. The mortuary is especially destined for those who have been by their losses at the tables to either blow out their brains or to take poison. Suicides of this kind are very numerous at Monte Carlo. Hitherto it has been the practice to bury them as hurriedly as possible, without taking proper means for their identification. From henceforth their remains will be preserved, and their relatives and friends have been communicated with, and their wishes obtained with regard to the disposition of the body.

Lord de Freyne, whose death was erroneously reported last week on both sides of the Atlantic, and who is now enjoying the questionable satisfaction of reading in British and foreign newspapers his own obituary, is head of the very old Irish family to which Field Marshal Sir John French, G. C. B., belongs. He is one of the Conservative members of the House of Lords, his peerage created as recently as 1851, being not an Irish dignity, but one of the United Kingdom. His eldest son and heir, prematurely proclaimed as having succeeded to his honors, has spent a number of years in America. Lord de Freyne, however, badly off, and his health failing, has been recently doomed to remain so. For his father has no less than twelve other children by his second marriage, who have all been favored at the expense of their eldest half-brother, until now, and to make provision for whom Lord de Freyne is alienating everything in his power from the family property. Indeed, Arthur French will succeed to nothing but the peerage, and to the heavy encumbrance entailed upon the County Roscommon, which have belonged to his ancestors since the reign of James I.

It was financial difficulties which forced Arthur French to resign his commission as Lieutenant in the Royal Fusilier Regiment. Three years after his marriage, he came to the United States, and in 1905 enlisted in New York in Company A, of the Eighth Regiment of Infantry, leaving his wife and child behind him in England. He had endeavored in vain to find there some means of livelihood. But having been educated only for the army, and being without any special training, he found it impossible to secure any civilian employment of a remunerative character. He thereupon determined to seek his fortune in America. Here he found civilian employment quite as difficult to obtain, and was thinking of going back to England and enlisting in the army as a private soldier, as the only calling for which he was fitted, when some one suggested to him that he would be better off if he joined the United States Army.

After enlisting in the latter he explained that the pay was considerably higher in the American service than in that of the English army, and moreover he was brought while in the ranks into contact with a class of men who, taking them as a whole, were superior in education and intelligence to the men with whom the rank and file of the British regiments of the line are composed, and that, moreover, the private in the American army enjoys a far greater sense of personal independence, and is enabled to retain much more respect than is the case with soldiers in most European armies.

Lord de Freyne's eldest son and heir is by no means the only foreigner of birth who has served in the ranks of the United States Army. There are quite a number of them, and among the first names that occur to me at this moment are those of Sir Bryan Leighton, the rich Shropshire baronet, and the Hon. Lyulph Ogilvy (brother of the Earl of Argyll), both of whom went through the Spanish War under the Stars and Stripes.

At one time Lord de Freyne's ancestors were very rich indeed. Thus, John French, of French Park, who comprises Dunfermline Castle, still the family mansion was known throughout Ireland as "Tierna More," which means "the great landowner," and when he died at an advanced age in 1734, his wake, which cost many thousands of pounds sterling, lasted no less than three days and nights, and was attended by crowds, high and low, from all Roscommon and the neighboring counties.

The extravagance of his successors somewhat impaired the great possessions of the family. But what divested the peerage of most of its landed property was the marriage of the daughter, Lord de Freyne. He was wedded by a Roman Catholic priest at Cork to Catherine Maree, daughter of Luke Carey. After three sons had been born to the union, it was discovered that the law of Ireland the marriage was invalid, and the children illegitimate, owing to the fact that the Roman Catholic priest had no power to solemnize a marriage between a Catholic and a Protestant. Lord and Lady de Freyne were then married again, in the Protestant Established Church, of Grange Gorman, Dublin, in 1854, and had four sons, and in the following year, succeeded to the title of his parents, by way of repairing the injustice, left every vestige of property that they could to their eldest and illegitimate three sons, one of whom became a nobleman, and the others landed estates. His entire life after succeeding to the title, has been one of struggle to make both ends meet, and he has been wholly dependent on the revenues from his Roscommon County property for his own maintenance, and that of his very large family, he has been compelled to take the most rigorous and even ruthless measures in order to obtain the rents from his tenants. It has been a case of getting the money from them, or of literally starving with his wife and children, who thereupon beset him, and he has obtained an unenviable reputation throughout the Emerald Isle as a singularly tyrannical and heartless rack-renting landlord.

Baron Maurice Arnold de Forest, whose reconciliation to his wife, Lady de Freyne, has been the subject of much gossip, and third Lord Gerard, has created so much of a stir in English society, and who is now living with her once more in perfect amity at the French seaside resort of Le Touquet, in one of the two natural sons of Lucien Hirsch, only child of the well-known financier, railroad builder, and philanthropist, Baron Hirsch. Lucien predeceased the old baron, who thereupon bequeathed the bulk of his enormous fortune to his two grandsons. Both of them received the Austrian title of baron from Emperor Francis Joseph, in recognition of their grandfather's munificent charity.

Maurice, after marrying and divorcing Mme. Gaston Menier, married in 1904 Lord Gerard's sister, by whom he has two children, and incidentally secured naturalization as an English citizen. After the birth of the two children the marriage came to grief, largely through the influence of the baroness's English relatives and friends, who conceived a dislike for her husband, as too foreign in his ways. They also objected to his political affiliations with Lloyd George, which led to his being blackballed by the Reform Club, and to the subsequent resignation of the baroness's father, Lord George and of Winston Churchill, his two sponsors. The trouble thus engendered culminated in the baroness's elopement with a young officer of the army, to the utter disgust of Lord Ashton, whose mother was an American. Baron de Forest did not divorce her, although she refused to return to him. Subsequently De Forest felt himself compelled to bring a suit for slander against his wife's mother, the widowed Lady Gerard, but eventually dropped the proceedings owing to the difficulty of obtaining the necessary evidence against her. Since then Ashton has died, and now Lord de Freyne, whose country seat is Stowe House, the famous country seat or rather palace, of the last three Dukes of Buckingham and Chandos, is once more living happily with his wife.

This reconciliation is by no means an isolated case in English society. Thus, Sir Samuel Scott is living happily with his wife, the prettiest of the daughters of the Earl of Cadogan, although during a period of months of separation, when she really ought to have been under restraint, she was induced to elope by one of her husband's brother officers of the Regiment of Buffs, a young man of the name of Burnaby.

English society shows itself indulgent to these wives whose indiscretions have thus been overlooked by their husbands; no doubt taking the ground that if the latter are the most injured parties, have seen fit to pardon, the remainder of the world can afford to show similar magnanimity. Not so, however, royalty. King Edward and Queen Alexandra, notwithstanding their warm friendship for the Earl of Cadogan, and for his first wife, and their affection for Lady Scott, whom they had known from her infancy, and who had been the girlhood friend of their daughter, could not see their way to receive her at court or even to have her attend any entertainments at which they were present.

QUITS WORRYING TO GO TO SCHOOL

Ramona Borden Settles Parental Dispute by Deciding Educational Course.

[Special to The Times-Dispatch.]
New York, September 14.—Miss Ramona Borden, the eighteen-year-old daughter of Gail Borden, the multimillionaire condensed milk manufacturer, whose disappearance from a sanatorium in Pompton Lake, N. J., last April, caused a nation-wide search to be made for her by her father, plans to enter either Wellesley or Vassar this fall.

This information was received here to-day from Los Angeles, where Miss Borden has been spending the summer with her mother. Her education led to much strife in the Borden house, and the failure of her father and mother to agree on this point is said to have led to their separation. Now the girl has decided the problem herself.

Because she has borne the brunt of this family strife, Ramona has come to be known among her friends as the "poor little rich girl." She has written her New York friends: "I have ceased to worry and be troubled," she said. "Through this summer I have learned to laugh and be happy."

Vassar and Wellesley girls were much agitated when they learned of Miss Borden's decision to enter one of the fashionable schools.

SMITH WILL HELP EXAMINERS

Former Treasurer of Trust Company to Aid in Disintegrating Mix-Up.

New York, Sept. 14.—Raymond E. Smith, former treasurer of the Roseville Trust Company, of this city, who surrendered last night and was released on $15,000 bail, will confer tomorrow with counsel for the bank directors and later assist the bank examiners in disintegrating the mix-up he left behind when he disappeared August 2. This was made known in a statement by Smith to-day, in which he declares he never took a cent from the bank for his individual use. A shortage of more than $200,000 was announced after Smith's disappearance, and later statements have appreciably raised that sum.

Hinkley, Jr., who owned the building, also covered by insurance, about $300, also covered by insurance.

Hope to Revive Market.
[Special to The Times-Dispatch.]
Lynchburg, Va., September 14.—Local tobacco men are making a strenuous effort to revive Lynchburg as a bright tobacco market, and will have a special sale of tobacco this afternoon. It was a large bright market, or a long time dark grades have been sold almost exclusively, the city being the largest dark market in the State.

Wanted on Murder Charge.

Don't Make But One Attempt to Win the $1,200; Make Ten Attempts!

Ever Consider That You Can Increase Your Chances Tenfold With an Answer Book?

"If at first you don't succeed, try again," is something that can be practiced by all. The Times-Dispatch's big Booklovers' Contest game.

A contestant, for instance, has no way of telling whether an answer he selects is the probable answer or the correct one or not. He does not know until the results are published, and he must judge as to the correct answers to the pictures is good or bad. He cannot correct his mistakes after he discovers what the correct answers are, for those are not announced until long after all sets are in. He must shoot all his arrows at once, put all his eggs in one basket, and await the results. He must, at least, submit his case in any way after it has once been submitted.

But in making up his list of answers, a contestant has the privilege, under the rules, of submitting as many as ten different answers to each picture. Thus a contestant can really correct his mistakes before he sends in his list. He can, if he likes, submit all the eight may be the correct title. Remember that incorrect answers must not do count against you if you give the correct answer also.

It is true that if you do not have an Answer Book you are compelled to submit each answer on a separate slip, and a separate picture and coupon. If you make three answers to picture No. 2, for instance, you must submit three copies of picture No. 2, and submit each answer on a separate picture and coupon. So if you make ten different answers to each picture (that would make a total of 70 answers to the seven pictures), you must submit 70 pictures, and make each answer on a separate picture, and each picture with a coupon.

But The Times-Dispatch has revised the Answer Book to do away with the necessity of getting all these additional pictures.

If you
